

Amanda Smith

Synopsis: I completed my foundational training at the Suffolk School of Arts, before gaining a first-class Honours degree in Graphic Arts from Anglia Ruskin University. Since graduating, I have been a member of the St. Barnabas Press Print Studio in Cambridge. This long association with St. Barnabas has enabled me to exhibit my work nationwide, and create art for commission. My working time is currently divided between my role as a graphic designer (for the University of Cambridge), and as a graphic artist working from my studio in Cambridgeshire.

I am inspired by many things, but a recurring theme in all the work I create is the idea that order and chaos underlies all aspects of daily life. Harmony and conflict are essential themes in my work. By attempting to create relationships between disparate objects and subject matters, my images explore the possibility that all things conform, in a predetermined order.

Since 2001, my work has involved the creation of conceptually based screen prints, photographs, drawings, and more recently, ready-made pieces. I also use digital technology to manipulate composition.
